all about artists

Submitted by Terry Richardson, Resident Artist

Terry is a Seattle native and has lived in Magnolia for over 10 years. She loves Magnolia so much that she purchased and has lived in her current home twice. She attended the University of Washington where she studied zoology as an undergrad and received her doctorate in pharmacy. She worked professionally as a pharmacist and her art is greatly influenced by microbiology. She studied photography and art in school, but did not pursue it as a career until recently, and after a lot of encouragement from several of her artist friends.

She works predominately with mixed-painting mediums, including encaustics, resin, oil and acrylics. Her process focuses on deconstruction, transformation, and reconstruction. Her artworks are visual reconstructions of everyday materials, including books, magazines and tissue. She has an intentional engagement of the sense of touch, and the finished works create a textural and abstract presence of the virtually unrecognizable materials contained within.

An important step in her process is finding the right materials - The first phase of the process starts with finding a material to create her own unique canvas. For example, she has a series made from books, one made from magazine papers, one from tissue papers, and one from a traditional canvas. Sometimes inspired to paint on a traditional encaustic board or canvas. To see more of her beautiful work check her out at .
